□ Struggling to sift through endless CVs? You're not alone! □

Many architecture and design firms face the challenge of finding qualified candidates quickly, only to be overwhelmed by unfiltered applications that don't meet their needs.

Here's how to create an effective candidate shortlist:

1. Define Role Requirements: Clearly outline the essential skills (think software expertise like Revit or AutoCAD) and experience needed for the position.
2. Quality over Quantity: Aim for a focused shortlist—better to have a few strong candidates than dozens of mediocre ones.
3. Use Tailored Screening: Engage a recruitment partner who understands your specific design needs, ensuring every candidate aligns with your studio's vision.
4. Portfolio Review: Don't skip this step! A resume might not showcase creativity or technical skills like a strong portfolio can.
5. Prioritize Fit: Look for candidates who align not just with skillset but also with your company culture and client communication style.
